

Educator in the Workplace

The Educator in the Workplace program connects teachers with the business community. The course provides educators the opportunity to develop an awareness and understanding of integrating the business and education communities, explore and develop innovative instruction practices, and provide relevance while building a capacity to enhance student achievement. Through a mix of classroom learning activities and on-site learning in a workplace environment, educators enrolled in this course can expect to bring relevant work standards and experiences back to their classrooms.

Educators spend three days in the classroom and three days working at a preselected business.

This program is currently offered to YCAL Partner School Educators as a noncredit (Act 48) course and/or as a graduate-level course at Penn State York. Educators enrolling in this fashion would be responsible for the University's per-credit enrollment costs, and must register through Penn State York.
